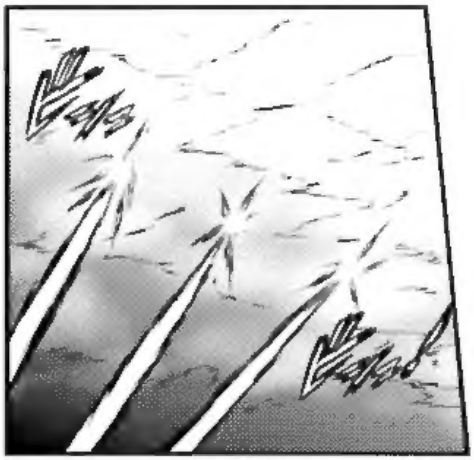
WORLD GUIDE 01 Anti-Beam Defence Systems

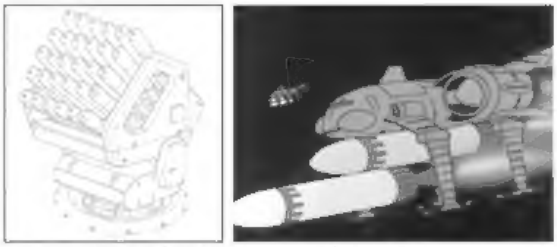
What is a Beam Deflection Curtain?

The "Beam Deflection Curtain" is an example of an Anti-Beam defence system created to protect against attacks from mega-particle cannons. These deflection curtains have been in active service since the One Year War. Their mechanism of action is to scatter particles that diffuse and deflect the output of beam weaponry in the immediate area. Although with noted limitations, deployment and range, they remain a viable method of defence. As the war progressed, the development of beam fields and beam resistant coatings became a more common method of anti-beam defence. Despite the creation of more effective defence methods, these systems remain in use today.

During the operation to stop the Mace of Judgement, the GM-III D piloted by Iris was used to defend the nuclear pulse engine. This suit was equipped with and fired particle-filled warheads to deploy a disruption curtain.

When a charge from a beam weapon encounters a beam disruption curtain, its destructive power is dissipated, reducing its effectiveness. The effect of the curtain is temporary.

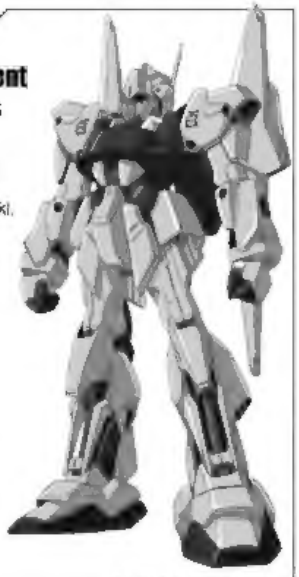




▲ During the One Year War, it was used in the capture of the space fortress Solomon and the battle for A Baoa Qu. On the right is an Earth Federation Public-Class ship, and on the left is a hedgehog-type design with an anti-beam munition and ship missile launcher. This device is mounted on the Principality of Zeon's MA-05Ad Big Rang.

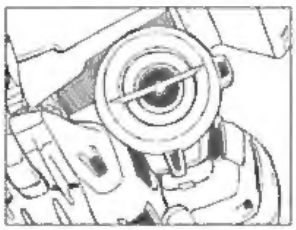
Anti-Beam Defence Equipment
Beam-Resistant Coatings

Anti-beam defence equipment that can be applied to mobile suits, for example, the MSN-00100 Hyaku Shiki. Records show that the armour exterior of the Gundam Kestrel was also treated the same way.



Beam Madu

Equipped on the Gundam Kestrel, this device is used to defend against beam attacks while the blade is deployed. The mechanism of action is to use the repulsive force of the I-field that forms around a beam sabre.



I-Field

A type of beam barrier that creates an invisible anti-beam defence field. For it to work, it requires a high-output generator. It does have several limitations, but depending on the output of the device, can be effective against very powerful weaponry, including the gunfire from battleships.

Mobile Suits Used in the Mace of Judgement Operation.

One of the mobile suits added to the Delphi squadron for the operation to block the Mace of Judgement was the RX-154 Barzam. Deployed in combat towards the end of the Gryps War, this suit did not have any notable advantages, and continued in use after the war. It its latter years of service, the colour of the unit was changed from blue to white.

Ester, who described the Barzam as "nostalgic" had piloted it before.

The monoeye and large crest shaped antenna makes this design stand out. These are features that suggest a strong influence from the Titans in its development. No additional design variations seem to have been developed past this model.

The Delphi team went into operation with 13 mobile suits, including the GM III. When considering the strength of the enemy and the level of pilot training, this was not considered an adequate amount of fighting power.

This machine is equipped with the same beam rifle and shield as the GM III, but this is done with convenience in mind, by designing suits compatible with other models in service.

RX-154 Barzam

In response to the ongoing Gryps War this mobile suit was developed with intent to use it as the main force to replace the GM III. Developed at the New Guinea base, its unmistakable appearance includes a torso with an integrated waist and backpack, and legs with exposed mobile frames. Sharing parts with existing machines gave it an advantage in expense, and ease of deployment in large numbers in a short period of time. During the first Neo Zeon war, it remained in use by former Titans who had joined Neo Zeon.
